STAMINA

2019 Global Market Outlook – Q2 update
The pause that refreshes.

Synopsis
Global central banks have turned dovish, China stimulus is stronger than expected and trade-war tensions are easing. The cycle is becoming slightly more supportive for equities, but we believe it’s late in the game and upside potential is limited.

Key market themes
Markets are caught between incoming data pointing to slower global growth and forward-looking factors that suggest improvement later in the year. We think global cycle conditions will moderately improve as we head deeper into 2019, but we see the window of opportunity for equity markets as limited. We have an underweight preference for U.S. equities, mostly driven by expensive valuations. The U.S. Federal Reserve (the Fed)’s pause on interest-rate hikes has helped push markets up, but wage growth is already threatening corporate profit margins. We believe it will eventually find its way into inflation and bring the Fed back into action. We expect a Fed rate hike late in the year, followed by another two hikes in 2020.

Europe has suffered from several one-off events that have depressed growth, but we view most of these as temporary, and expect to see growth in the region improve through the year. Fiscal easing is likely to provide a decent tailwind, with the European Commission expecting that eurozone fiscal thrust will be 0.4% of GDP (gross domestic product) this year. In addition, the European Central Bank (ECB) has become more dovish, pushing out its guidance on the timing of the first funds rate rise to the end of 2019. Overall, we’re neutral on eurozone equity valuations, while we see core government bonds as long-term expensive.

The ongoing Brexit uncertainty has been detrimental to the British economy. Corporate confidence is low, which prevents businesses from investing. The consumer is pessimistic, slowing demand for durables such as houses and cars. UK bonds remain very expensive, with yields well below fair value.

The Asia-Pacific region is set to benefit from the increased focus on policy stimulus from the Chinese government. We think emerging Asian equities should be able to deliver around 10% earnings growth for 2019. Japanese economic activity has been disappointing, but we think the big downgrade to industry consensus earnings expectations is too pessimistic. In Australia, the market is currently pricing in one central bank rate cut by the end of the year, which in our view is slightly aggressive, given the labour market should remain fairly solid.

We have business cycle concerns in Canada, as the economy is clearly vulnerable to downside shocks. We are neutral toward Canadian equities in an absolute sense, but continue to emphasise a preference for those domestic equities over the U.S.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Economic indicators</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>U.S. GDP GROWTH</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EUROPEAN GDP GROWTH</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CHINA’S ECONOMY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TRADE TENSIONS</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Asset class views

Equities: Broadly neutral

Our cycle, value and sentiment investment process points to a broadly neutral view on global equities. We have an underweight preference for U.S. equities due to expensive valuations, but we’re more positive on non-U.S. developed equities. We see valuations in Japan and Europe as reasonable. We like the value offered by emerging markets equities, as the asset class is a beneficiary of the Fed rate-hike pause, China stimulus and a potential thaw in the trade war.

Fixed income: Fair value at 2.7% in the U.S.

We believe U.S. Treasuries offer reasonable value. Our models give a fair value yield of 2.7% for the 10-year bond. We see German, Japanese and UK bonds as very expensive with yields well below fair value. The cycle is a headwind for all bond markets as inflation pressures slowly build. High yield credit is expensive and losing cycle support, which is typical late in the cycle, when profit growth slows and there are concerns about defaults.

Currencies: Preference for Japanese yen

The yen is our preferred currency as we look toward the second quarter. It’s significantly undervalued, can get cycle support as over-pessimistic growth expectations are revised higher and has contrarian sentiment support from extreme market-short positions.

We believe that pessimism around the U.S. economy is overdone and we expect another leg up in the U.S. Dollar Index (DXY) that could take it to 98, possibly to 100, before its bull run ends for this cycle.

The euro and sterling appear undervalued. The recovery in European economic indicators should support the euro. Sterling will be volatile around the Brexit negotiations, but should rebound if a deal is agreed with Europe. Overall, we believe it has more upside potential than the euro.

Please visit: russellinvestments.com/uk/global-market-outlook to read the complete 2019 Global Market Outlook – Q2 update.
IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Unless otherwise specified, Russell Investments is the source of all data. All information contained in this material is current at the time of issue and, to the best of our knowledge, accurate. Any opinion expressed is that of Russell Investments, is not a statement of fact, is subject to change and does not constitute investment advice.

The value of investments and the income from them can fall as well as rise and is not guaranteed. You may not get back the amount originally invested. Any past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance.

©1995-2019 Russell Investments Group, LLC. All rights reserved.