Passive currency strategy

Exposure to assets denominated in a non-base currency can introduce volatility. This currency volatility can be significant and may potentially overwhelm the investment gains in a client's underlying portfolio. Many investors are uncomfortable with this volatility and look to Russell Investments for assistance in managing this risk. We have been successfully helping clients since 1993 by offering a passive currency management strategy. Over time we have developed significant expertise and scale in our passive currency strategy including a suite of proprietary tools and unique capabilities designed to meet the bespoke needs of clients located in all major geographic regions around the world.

A bespoke and cost-effective way to manage currency risk

A passive currency strategy identifies and applies a static currency hedge ratio and is designed for the specific exposures and base currency for each individual client. Aspects such as liquidity management, tenor management, counterparty credit exposure, proxy hedging, performance attribution and regulatory reporting are all carefully designed to meet the unique needs of each client.

Dynamic currency strategy

While our passive currency strategy is exclusively focused upon reducing the risk associated with exposure to non-base currency, our Dynamic Currency Strategy supports the dual investor goals of risk reduction and return enhancement. Russell Investments' Dynamic Currency Strategy goes a long way to solving the conundrum of what, when and how much currency exposure to hedge.

A smarter way to manage currency risk

As volatility increases in currency markets, we increasingly see investors re-thinking their currency management approaches, many are looking to address the dual goals of risk-reduction and return enhancement. Russell Investments' Dynamic Currency Strategy was specifically designed to address this need. The strategy supports dynamic changes in a client's currency hedge ratio informed by inputs from a proprietary quantitative model. This model was developed by the currency experts at Russell Investments and incorporates signals focused upon the three main drivers of expected return in currency markets: Carry, Value and Trend. The dynamic currency strategy looks for opportunities to raise expected returns and reduce cash flow drawdown by maintaining or increasing hedges on currencies experiencing declines while maintaining or reducing hedges on currencies experiencing gains, relative to the unique base currency of the client.

Absolute return currency strategy

Currency exposure offers unique opportunities for return enhancement as well as providing diversification benefits that may reduce risk at the total portfolio level. Russell Investments' Absolute Return Currency Strategy was designed to capture these return and diversification benefits for clients.

First developed in 2010, we have been successfully delivering our Absolute Return Currency Strategy to external clients since 2011 and have delivered strong investment performance supported by outstanding client service.

Delivering strong investment returns from currency exposure

Built upon the same quantitative framework as our Dynamic Currency Strategy, our Absolute Return Currency Strategy uses a proprietary quantitative model focusing upon the three main drivers of expected return in currency markets: Carry, Value and Trend. The Absolute Return Currency Strategy differs from our Dynamic Currency Strategy on the basis that it is not influenced by a client's base currency and the resulting long/short currency positions are agnostic to the underlying currency exposures within the client's portfolio. It is not uncommon for clients to combine our Absolute Return Currency Strategy with our Passive Currency Strategy.

A trading approach which supports best execution and fiduciary alignment

Agency FX trading

Unlike a principal trading provider, Russell Investments does not have a proprietary trading book. Our currency management strategies are supported by an Agency Foreign Exchange (FX) trading approach, where liquidity providers compete for our order flow and we pass execution benefits directly to you, including savings related to reduced bid/ask spreads, market impact and custodian charges. Acting on your behalf, we:

- Reduce costs by netting your transactions and trading as an agent
- Improve transparency by time stamping every transaction and showing the cost of execution
- Align our interests with yours by acting as a fiduciary
- Manage counterparty risk by trading with over 20 banks

In addition, you can take advantage of our foreign currency trading services whether you handle currency needs internally or delegate them to your investment managers. Our trading team executed FX trades in excess of £577 in 2019.

Employing an agent who is also a fiduciary has become more important as courts and regulators have become less patient with those who don't manage all their costs – including costs to trade foreign exchange – effectively. Investors can help manage these legal and regulatory risks by delegating responsibility to a currency trading agent who is also a fiduciary.

Russell Investments was also an early signatory of the FX Global Code which is a set of global principles of good practice designed to promote integrity and the effective functioning of the wholesale foreign exchange market.

Together or individually, these currency strategies are designed to lower transaction costs, minimise risk and reduce the operational burden of managing FX.
