Fund commentary

The Russell Investments Global Opportunities Fund outperformed the benchmark in May. Contributing to the Fund's outperformance was strong stock selection in Japan. This included overweights to Seiko Epson and Hitachi; both of which posted strong gains for the month. Stock selection in the US also added value over the period; notably underweights to growth names like Apple and Tesla. At the sector level, stock selection was strongest within consumer discretionary. In addition to our underweight to Tesla, this included overweights to German car makers BMW and Mercedes Benz. Other notable positions to add value were ex-benchmark holdings in Hong Kong's Orient Overseas (International) Ltd. and Brazilian oil major Petróleo Brasileiro S.A. Meanwhile, the Fund's active positioning strategy outperformed in May. The strategy is currently positioned in favour of value and quality to complement our strategic factor positioning. Value continued to outperform growth over the period, though this was partly offset by our quality bias. In contrast, stock selection in the UK had a slightly negative impact on performance, including underweights to British American Tobacco and Shell. Our broader underweight to the strong-performing energy sector also weighed on returns, including underweights to US names Exxon Mobil and Chevron. Other key holdings to impact performance were an overweight to Swiss pharmaceutical company Roche Holding AG and an underweight to Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co.
